I dedicate this poem to one of the greatest representatives of Russian literature, Sergei Esenin. As we know, the poet lived in the 1895-1925's years. This time was quite contradictory.... And so, it could not but affect Russian literature. True creators, writing a particular work, may encourage masses to participate in the war or in the "purifying fire" –revolution, chaos...

Usually love saves the human soul. Sergei Esenin had three wives and several mistresses. But even love could not save him.... An extract from the poem "Black Man" evidences the poet's deep depression. And who knows if there could have been another way out?

I like his poetry. In it I can find exact images, exact descriptions of his lyrical characters' state, and feel it all with my own heart...

To Sergei Esenin

There was Esenin in Russia...

He held "a brush "in his hands,

He called to the Chaos

To break all the bens.

But at that difficult time,

Love was walking beside...

He could confide

His beloveds.

"Listen to me, listen to me, my friend,

I am very, no, seriously ill.

What is the reason? This pain I do not understand."

It is a hard life...

You should not take up a knife.

You should not go away...

Remember this day,

The 21st of September –

Esenin's birthday!
